A Forloru Hope.

It is sometimes very difficult to judge as to whether people talk merely for the purpose of bearing themselves talk, or whether they are simply ignorant of what they are talking about. Whenever any great enterprise interests the public mind, any new idea thrown out which is calculated to divert attention is projudicial to the success of that enterprise. We have doubted whether the talk lately made about effecting an arrangement for free trade with the Australian Colonies is not intended solely to detruct the public mind from the main question of seeking a reciprocity trenty with the United States. The foil wing extract from the London Evening Mail of the 17th of May last, will doubtless satisfy our readers of the impossibility of making such an arrangement with the Australian Colonies. Even His if it were possible, it would have to be made with each one individually, and submitted to the tabains Imperial parliament for its approval. When we reflect that the Australian Colonies are supplied with sugars by Mauritius and other British Colonies, it will be evident that no British Parliament

On the settlement of California trade between the two countries increased, principally by the supply by Hawaii of food, for immediate consumption, for the swarms of miners and settlers who flucked into the Golden State. As a consequence wages rose, and the first supply of laborers was brought into the country by the time had been commenced by foreign settlers.
